

John Jebo

Worst Interview by a Friend

I had a job interview at primary school that was a group interview. I got there just on time. Everyone had to sit in circle where the interviewer would then ask a random question and go around the circle. I had the misfortune of being second in the order so I had half the time to think about my response compared to other people who had much longer to think out their responses. One of the questions was "describe yourself and personality". I could not think of anything and my response was just was not good. I don't think the interviewer was satisfied with my answer and I didn't get the job.

Analysis

What I realized was that, preparation is very important to pass an interview no matter how sure you are of getting the job. Without preparation, you fail to answer even the simplest questions well. She could have probable answered the question better if she was the last person but that is one of the disadvantages of not preparing. If she had prepared properly, she would have no problem being the first to answer.

Another factor is also getting to the center before time. This gives you enough time to relax and regroup yourself. I think getting there just on time contributed to her failure at the interview session. She did not have time to get settled and study the environment.

Also I thought she felt very uncomfortable in the group setting because this was her first time being interviewed this way. It is important to be calm and prepare our mind when we meet uncomfortable situations so that we do not panic.